In 1998, Andi Goral rented a studio in the former Hagen battery factory in Cologne from an artist friend. Then, one day, a dramatic situation arose. A fire broke out in the room on the other side of the corridor, completely destroying the artist's works. Goral's paintings remained intact, but the building on Rolshover Straße in Cologne-Humboldt-Gremberg was no longer suitable for use. Andi Goral packed up his pictures as well as his , paints, oils, brushes, and pigments. He rented a wooden crate in a warehouse belonging to the haulage company Ilies Transport on Remscheider Straße in Cologne-Kalk, where he stored the paintings and his studio equipment. In the meantime, the haulage company transported the wooden box containing the paintings to a gigantic warehouse in Cologne-Porz. The paintings, which had been stored in the very same wooden crate in complete darkness for two decades, were moved from Cologne to the Eifel. In 2025, seven years after the move, Andi Goral unpacked – and has been painting and drawing in his new studio since.
